Citizens Think Crime Was Actuated by Secret Molive.

Washington, D. C., July 2—Residents of Gaithersburg, Md., now believe that the mutilation of Henry B. Stuart, which occurred near that village last Sunday night, was the work of men who knew him. The general belief is that the attack upon him was actuated by a motive other than a mere desire to practice cruelty upon a help-less negro. He charged that the assault was the act of men in the uniform of United States soldiers, and the War Department was asked to investigate.
